MULTI PERSONA SINDROMA

U sti-interese psikologi fenomeno es MPD, Multi Persona Disorder. Id es u sindroma in qi bi alo ma separa persona eko in mo soma. U viktima de u-ci pato freqe habe zero konski de mu konditio. Mu ne ski; ke krati de mu soma alterna inter plu hetero sub-persona. Sed, mu senti; ke mu habe u speci amnesia, alo konfusi. Maxi numera pato-pe habe ex ok a mo-tri persona; e oligo supra-multi-persona pote habe ma de mo centi sub-persona.

SOLA KEM NO-POLUTI

U geo inklude solo u limita qantita de fosili ergo-ma; e na uti id rapidi. U dura busti de fosili ergo-ma muta u klima. U busti ex bali karboni dioxide (CO₂); e id es u-ci; qi sti u termo-do efekti. Na nece detekt u neo origi de energi – sati pro holo globa; e id nece ne poluti u peri-lo.

Na pote muta sola energi ad elektro; sed, u-ci ne es u solutio a globa problema; kausa plu loka; topo es dura e mega sola, exemplo in deserta; es fo-tele ex plu mega centra de demo e industri. Elektro energi es fo funkcio; sed, pe ne pote stora id in mega qantita.

U maxi boni idea a-nu es muta sola-energi a kemi-ma. U-ci es facili de stora, e facili de transporta. Pe pote stora id in gasi, liqi alo solidi fisio.

Glosa

Η νέα μας γλώσσα;

της
ΑΓΑΘΑΣ ΖΑΡΑΚΟΒΙΤΟΥ

The Greek newspaper Eleuthero Typia (free press) of the many press cuttings from all parts of the world which have reached us, gave one of the best and most detailed account of Glosa.

It seems a good opportunity to show how a knowledge of the Glosa vocabulary can help anyone to quickly get a reading knowledge of Greek. And then from there a truly motivated person could soon get fluent in the language.

We have underlined many of the Greek words in the text which are recognizably the same (ignoring the affixed flexions of course) as the Glosa words.

Because of the Greek alphabet many English people may be put off even attempting to learn the language. But playing about with the letters and pronouncing them aloud will make you familiar with them within 30 minutes. Many of them occur in mathematics and so many of them are already familiar.

Below is a very brief outline of the Greek alphabet, with the names of the letters

First comes the name of the letter, then the capital, and lastly the small letter.

alfa	Α	α	as in	mAt
vita	Β	β		Victor
gamma	Γ	γ		tuG
delta	Δ	δ		THis
epsilon	Ε	ε		pEn
zita	Ζ	ζ		Zoo
ita	Η	η		mEEt

yiota	Ι	ι		mEEt
kapa	Κ	κ		Keep
lambda	Λ	λ		Love
mu	Μ	μ		Move
ni	Ν	ν		Nut
ksi	Ξ	ξ		foX
omikron	Ο	ο		tAUt
pi	Π	π		Pot
ro	Ρ	ρ		Reap
sigma	Σ	σ		Seat
taf	Τ	τ		Tap
ipsilon	Υ	υ		mEEt
fi	Φ	φ		Fate
khi	Χ	χ		Hot
psi	Ψ	ψ		laPSe
omega	Ω	ω		tAUt

VOWELS as in Glosa.

The above names of the letters give a rough indication of their pronunciation. If you are really interested, best get a book on Modern Greek.

This nice headline in EleutheroTypia (The Free Press) of May 25 transliterated reads;

U NEA MAS GLOSSA, which literally translated means; THE NEW OUR LANGUAGE

In Greek Glosa is feminine noun, so the adjective which describes it must also have a feminine ending. The masculine Greek for 'new' is NEOS, which changes to NEA when describing a feminine noun. There is the English word ELLEUTHEROMANIAC. Eleuthero is cognate with Latin LIBER and German LEUTE, people.

A very good little introduction to modern Greek is "Colloquial Greek" by Katerina Harris, pub. by Routledge.

Colloquial Greek is also called Demotic (popular) Greek. Official Greek is called Katharevousa. Demotic Greek comes straight from Ancient Greek and the difference between the two is very slight.

All alphabets have a common origin. The use of symbols started about 5000 years ago among Semitic peoples who had some knowledge of Egyptian hieroglyphs.

Colloquial Greek is not difficult to learn, and you very quickly get used to the letters.

The object of the Greek pages in PGN is not to provide a textbook course in the language, but to show how useful Glosa is in acquiring a good idea of any of the Euro-languages of Indo-European origin in an interesting way. English speakers are lucky in that their language consists of a mixture of German, Latin and Greek.

THE WAVES

The sun, risen, no longer couched on a green mattress darting a fitful glance through the watery jewels, bared its face and looked straight over the waves.

They fell with a regular thud. They fell with the concussion of horses' hooves on the turf. Their spray rose like the tossing of lances and assegais over the riders' heads. They swept the beach with steel-blue and diamond-tipped water. They drew in and out with the energy, the muscularity of an engine which sweeps its force out and in again.

The sun fell on cornfields and woods. Rivers became blue and many-plaited, lawns that sloped down to the water's edge became green as birds' feathers softly ruffling their plumes. The hills, curved and controlled, seemed bound by thongs, as a limb is laced by muscles; and the woods which bristled proudly on their flanks were like the curt, clipped mane on the neck of a horse.

In the garden where the trees stood thick over flower-beds, ponds, and greenhouses, the birds sang in the hot sunshine, each alone. One sang under the bedroom window, another on the top-most twig of the lilac bush; another on the edge of the wall. Each sang stridently, with passion, with vehemence, as if to let the song burst out of it, no matter if it shattered the song of another bird with harsh discord. Their round eyes bulged with brightness; their claws gripped the twig or rail. They sang, exposed without shelter, to the air and the sun, beautiful in their new plumage, shell-veined or brightly mailed, here barred with soft blues, here splashed with gold, or striped with one bright feather. They sang as if the song was urged out of them by the pressure of the morning. They sprang as if the edge of being was sharpened and must cut, must split the softness of the blue-green light.
